The vindicators of the freedom of the will individual genius of Columbus, and not merely the spirit of modern advecture, which led to the have lauguished on, they tell us, from reign to reign, under the corrupt tyranny of the Stuarts. Attording to this theory. Rousseau and Voltaire made the French Rayolation, Mr. Cobden. pealed the Corn-laws, and Wilberforce and Fixtou destroyed the slave-truic; just as Themistocles saved Greece from the overwhelming power of Persia, and Cosar rescued Rome from the hands of an aristocratic oligar.

ground on which to argue, from the difficulty or impossibility of unravelling the history of the past, and assigning each thread of the web to the particular agency which soun it. Nobody, for instance, can say with certainty how much Ignatius Loyola or Peter the Hormit. initiated for themselves or how much material, in the shape of floating spiritual fanaticism. they found ready to their hand, Mr. Buckle would say one thing about it, and the Emperor of the French, who believes in the divinity of cleverness, would say another. Of course a rational theory may be found to reconcile both positions; for though they appear to be irreconcileable, in reality they are nothing of the the influence of Chear, Columbus, and Ignatius Loyota. All that he would have to make out would be that heroic character is itself a natoral growth, and not a miraculous or supernatural phenomenon. Still, after all, though of the mind on the part of those who hold them. NEDY & Co. The question, therefore, whether horoes are manufactured by the age which they adorn, or whether, like Topsy, they grow independently of it, is worth a little consideration. No better times could be reflected for the purpose of such an examination than our own. The present generation is often called material and unromantic. To find romance in history sentimentalists go back to the ages of chivalry, of troubadonrs, and of cavaliers. There are no beross now, we are for ever being told. Every. thing is dull, prosy, and matter of fact. The age of sentiment and imagination is over, and that of tradesmen and of Joint-Stock Companios has taken its place. It is curious that anybody should venture to make assertions of this kind who opens his eyes and looks about him. So far from such language being justified Apply to by facts, it seems altogether refuted by them. Never, so far as we know, was there a time when: all contemporary bistory seemed to resolve itseif into the sayings and doings of a few great men more completely than at present. So far as grouping and picturesque effect goes, the story of the last fifteen years is quite as much the story of a knot of human beings as any three-volume tale. On the Continent it is the story of Napoleon III. of Cayour, of Garibuldi. of Mazzini, and of Bismark. At home it is almost synonymous with the biography of Luril Palmerston, Mr. Cobben, Mr. Bright, Mr. Gladstone, and Mr. Disraeli. Nothing but matrimonial incident is wanted to make it a sensation romance. There is no love-making. no giving in marriage, and no heroine but in other respects it is a perfect novel. We have therefore the opportunity of observing heroes closely, and can gather from our own observation and experience how much of their effect

The difference between them and others consists, not in their own energy, but in the force which backs them from hehind, and forces them into the van. Mr. Lowe, as far as intellectual acuteness is concerned, is the equal or the superior of both. Yet Mr. Lowe is powerless beside them, simply because he stands alone is fed by his own fuel and is not propelled by popular steam which i generated behind. It is fance that Mr. Bright; a very considerable crator. This, however, not the secret of his success, but only the reason why he has been chosen, on the minciple of na-tural selection, to succeed. If he had not been cloquent, somebody else would have been found who was: or, if the arts of rhetoric were scanty at the moment among Manchester politicians, their place would have been supplied, and their work done, by some other gladiator who was armed with a substitute for eloquence. Even if we take such exceptional cases as those. of the Emperor of the French and the lauder of the Conservative party, the same observa-tions apply to the full. Mr. Disraeli's, natural abilities are undisputed.
